Red Deer Community Band Society: A 50-year musical legacy

The best musical groups are always more than the sum of their parts.

That's saying something for the Red Deer Community Band Society, which brings together well over 100 adult and youth musicians in a half a dozen bands. The society is celebrating a 50-year musical legacy that began in 1968, with senior and junior bands first performing in 1969.

Society director Michael Mann said behind all of that musical talent is a dedicated group of volunteer organizers. "We've had a very supportive parent group and community," says Mann, who has been director since 2012.

"We've had a very strong executive and they're passionate about the organization. "It's not a one-man show, for sure." Mann says through its marching bands the society provides a unique musical experience. "With the Red Deer Royals, we have a qualified staff to nurture the students who want to be part of this organization.

"With the Royals we have kids who want to excel and being part of a marching band is something different," he says. "It is a huge commitment but I think they get a lot out of it too. That's a feeling of success when you put something on the field, a performance out there that nobody else is doing and you have a high level of success at it.

"It's a feeling you can't really equate with anything else." For many, the society's bands provide a sense of community. "The social element, I think, is a lot of the reason it's been so successful."

2019 will be a big year for the society. A performance at the Red Deer Rebels game is set for Jan. 30. A gala celebration event is planned for June 1 and the Marching Show Band Classic runs the following day. The Sounds of Summer takes place on July 3 and more events could be unveiled as the year progresses.

The Royals, which includes up to 120 musicians aged 11 to 21, are also heading to England and Ireland this summer. Travelling is nothing new for the marching band, which has entertained as far away as Kuala Lumpur, Australia and all over Europe. Last year, they travelled to the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany and took gold at the World Music Contest.

There is also an adult marching band, the Red Deer Regents, who perform throughout Central Alberta during the summer. As well, there is the novice band, Monday and Tuesday night bands and Jazz Explosion. For more information go to www.reddeerroyals.com.

We are the Arts

The Red Deer Community Band Society's mission is to promote the growth, value and appreciation of wind band music in Central Alberta.

Red Deer Royals Concert and Marching Show Band strives to create an environment of musicianship, learning, friendship and mentoring for musicians and colour guard aged 12 to 21.

We are proud to call Central Alberta home.

Join us in celebrating the best this area has to offer.
